South Belfast Roundtable

The South Belfast Roundtable was established in January 2004 as a response against the rising trend of racist attacks in South Belfast. This initiative now brings together representatives from over 60 minority ethnic groups, local community groups, faith and political leaders, and representatives of key statutory bodies with an interest working in local communities to promote good relations and identify projects that can effectively tackle racist attitudes.

The mission of the Roundtable is to "to work in partnership to challenge racism and promote diversity in South Belfast"

A range of training can be delivered free of charge to groups in South Belfast and individuals can access anti racism and cultural diversity training through the Roundtable's training programme
